Deprecated 1. For the remainder of this article we'll be referring to the films by their English titles. All films are in English, but the title usually changes depending on region from which the film was made. Q: Distributing a GUI application across multiple machines I want to create an application, which uses Qt in C++, that doesn't require administrator privileges to be installed. The user should be able to have it on his/her desktop, but he/she shouldn't have the ability to make changes to the computer itself. How can I distribute an application, which is only available as a.exe, so that it's impossible for the user to modify it? Edit: I know of.exe with "self modifying code" and a.dll +.lua files. The thing is I don't want the user to be able to see any files, even the.exe. A: You can create several Virtual Machines with different privileges; so, the user can run your application only on one of them. Q:

Creating a data factory with extended data types I have a data factory that creates pipelines from a couple of regular parameter sets and some extended parameter sets. The extended parameter sets (created via the.NET Tool) have a couple of extra attributes applied as well, like [DisallowUnsettingValueAttribute()] and [Validator()]. The problem is that when creating the data factory (from the standard.NET tool) these attributes get flagged as error, so my pipeline needs to be invalidated and needs to be recreated. Is there any other way to create a data factory that also adds these attributes (DisallowUnsettingValueAttribute() and Validator() in this case)? A: There is currently no way to do this (tho, there has been some discussion of
