Belle MONOSSHELL SEED-LAYERING Climate change is happening, and no one is immune. But the way to fight back is to make a conscious effort to do less harm to our planet. That's how we've chosen to help the earth, and you can too. From the day we can remember, we've been planting seeds. We've been lying them in the ground, nudging them between the cracks of stones, piling them up into mounds in the form of a haystack. We've been sharing the space between the stems of our neighbor's plants in order to make way for a whole row of potatoes. We've been planting fennel for our clients to eat in their sandwiches, and roses in order for them to give as gifts. We've been providing seed for our friends and family for years. But now, we've started thinking about something we haven't thought about before: how do we best ensure that the seeds we sow don't end up in someone's coffee table or in a skip? This is where we need your help. We're thinking of you. We're thinking of the world. When climate change takes a toll on our environment, the small agriculture industry has to work overtime to start a seed bank. To ensure the seeds we've been sharing stay in the ground and not end up in waste, we now need to think about how to protect them in a way that ensures there's no degradation in quality and no risk of germination. We're offering you the chance to get involved by supporting us in our mission of making a difference and teaching other farmers about the unique qualities of monoshelled seeds. Fist planted: For our first ever Seed-Laying Competition, we're inviting you to enter a monoshelled seed, and to explain why it is special. At our farm, we believe that monoshelled seeds are the finest of the bunch. Their slow and steady growth is the reason why

Grace Conkling Grace James Conkling (November 23, 1854 – February 12, 1934) was an American actress. She was born in Louisville, Kentucky, United States. Biography Conkling attended the Lowell Institute in Boston, Massachusetts, and trained with Mary Ingles. She made her Broadway debut in 1860. She first toured the United States with her husband, Richard Conkling, a well-known actor, and later returned to play again on Broadway, and with Richard in Europe. In 1893 she became an American citizen, taking the name Mrs. Jackson. She married New York comedian William Bush (March 9, 1850 – September 21, 1902), an older brother of Lena and Edwin, on July 25, 1885, at the Broadway Theatre in New York. Bush had also played Shakespeare's characters in theatres. After their marriage in New York City, the couple moved to Jersey City, New Jersey, where they rented an apartment in the Stuyvesant Heights area. At this point, her stage career diminished. Bush wrote an autobiography in his later years, and his life was dramatized in a 1935 Broadway play, This Was Bush. In 1904, Grace and William attempted to reform Ethel "Babe" Guino, who had attempted suicide by jumping into the Hudson River on July 4, 1902. She died of a paralytic stroke at the age of 79, while in mental and physical health. The Conkling-Bush home, at 2 North

12th Street in the Stuyvesant Heights section of New York City, was converted into the Gracie D. Bush House of Care. Her grave, marked with a simple headstone, is in Woodlawn Cemetery in The Bronx, New York City. Filmography 3da54e8ca3
