In my case, I have a personal situation where I live in a house which was given to me by my parents, and I want to know how much money I need to pay each month to rent it from the company who owns the land on which the house is located. I have already seen some calculators online, and they are much more complicated than what I'm looking for. I just want some advice on how much I'm supposed to pay, month by month, for someone else to live in my home. A: Some companies charge annually for their 'landlord', some charge monthly. Most charges are somewhere in-between, and often the cheapest options are geared towards permanent tenants (eg. no lease, no water, no electricity, etc). It's rare to be able to get a direct answer like this. You may have to call them to ask them. A local realtor is a good starting point. Have an accountant or financial advisor look at the expenses involved to make sure you're not paying for things you don't need. Ideally you will find a tenant who rents their own apartment or house, and don't have to pay maintenance costs. In that case, you could move to a cheaper area. A: By far the cheapest option is to let the house. As long as you don't require any future maintenance or repairs, you should be able to do this for around £200 per month. Renting, the cheapest option I've found is £300 per month in London. We live in Glasgow, so that is an estimate based on living there. Isobars isolated in aqueous two-phase systems involving anionic polymers: a dynamic modeling approach. The two-phase coacervation properties of anionic polymers combined with an anion-exchange resin were studied in order to obtain aqueous two-phase systems for the separation of charged macromolecules using only simple equipment. In all cases, four experimental phases were identified
