A 32-bit version is based on the 32-bit operating system, so it is much faster than the 64-bit. Existing approaches to multiphase liquid chromatography (LC) rely on a series of pumps which are set to deliver a predetermined and predetermined volume of eluent. The problem is that this leads to large volumes of waste eluent; in particular, if the eluent on the high pressure pump is "returned", this waste still has a significant volume. The problem becomes even more acute in LC due to the very small eluent volumes available. For example, in a typical chromatographic system using high performance LC (HPLC), the waste volume can be on the order of 0.1 L. This is far higher than typical waste volumes encountered in typical analytical chemistry or laboratory chemical procedures, such as 0.01 L-10 L. Furthermore, existing approaches to multiphase LC require the pumps to be operated at predetermined speed. If a pump is turned on for longer than the predetermined time, then it delivers eluent until the pre-set volume of eluent is dispensed. This means that the pump will spend less time at lower pressures and therefore is more likely to freeze. In addition, pressure surges may be more likely to occur and are less likely to be accommodated by a pump equipped for continuous running. Therefore, there is a need to provide a set of pumps for mult

Get breaking news alerts and special reports. The news and stories that matter, delivered weekday mornings. Riots broke out in the Indian capital of Delhi over the weekend after a gang of men from a distant state raped a 23-year-old woman, and Indian police said the accused men had been released on bail after a court set bail for them at an astronomical amount. A police officer fires a tear gas canister towards protesters after a mob attacked the house of the accused in New Delhi, India, Saturday, Dec. 12, 2012. Hundreds of protesters have clashed with police at the Raja Moti Bagh police station in New Delhi, India, after a gang of alleged rapists were released on bail. Associated Press/Manish Swarup

The woman was left fighting for her life after the attack and is in critical condition. Let our news meet your inbox. The news and stories that matters, delivered weekday mornings. This site is protected by recaptcha India's upper house of parliament has demanded that the men be killed, and the prime minister has called the gang members "outsiders." But some of the gang members in question are from the northern state of Uttar Pradesh, one of the most backward areas of India. While the attackers were accused of traveling to the capital to carry out their heinous crimes, those from the northern state are not viewed as outsiders. In a recent report, Time magazine described Uttar Pradesh as "a vast, mostly Hindu, country of 1.2 billion people, spread over 1.1 million square miles and one of the world's most populous nations." According to the Global Corruption Report, one in every five Indians lives on under $1.25 a day — while high rates of hunger, abuse and prostitution are just some of the "injustices" that plague that particular state. In 2011, the country's poverty rate was pegged at 11.6 percent, while high rates of illiteracy and unemployment linger. The country had the third-highest child mortality rate in the world. Some Indian women and celebrities took to social media sites to speak out against the alleged rapists and what they described as casteand gender-based discrimination.
