Selective inhibition of glycoprotein Ia/IIIa and glycoprotein IIb/IIIa fibrinogen receptor-mediated platelet aggregation. Antiplatelet drugs have been developed for their specific antithrombotic effect. The glycine-arginine-glycine-aspartate (GRGD) peptides, which mimic the ligand-binding domain of the platelet integrins alpha2beta1 (I-domain) and alpha5beta1 (V-domain), have been shown to inhibit platelet aggregation to subnanomolar concentrations. We tested the antiaggregatory activity of platelet I- and V-domain peptides in well-characterized flow cytometry assays to evaluate their selectivity for specific integrin binding. The results of these studies demonstrate that the I-domain peptide [Arg(D)Phe]GRGDSP (I-1,1) specifically inhibits the fibrinogen receptor (GPIIb/IIIa) on human platelets. In contrast, a truncated form of the V-domain peptide (MDLEVSPEVHPKVIL, V-12,1), which includes the amino acids which form the receptor binding domain of fibrinogen, is highly selective for the platelet fibrinogen receptor (GPIIIa/IIb). The I-1,1 sequence effectively inhibits aggregation at higher concentrations than does V-12,1. Platelet aggregation measured by light transmission aggregometry, however, does not show a complete inhibition of platelet reactivity at concentrations as high as 10 $\mu\text{mol/L}$. This study demonstrates the beneficial effects of I-domain inhibition by a low-molecular-weight peptide, which may be a more potent and selective inhibitor of the platelet receptor for fibrinogen than high-molecular-weight agents.
