"In three months, this is all going to be over," the Democratic front-runner said at an organizing conference in Washington. "We need to act now. In the era of Trump, in the era of Trump, there are a lot of things that are going to change. But the one thing that cannot change is that our values, for our values, for our values, or do we accept that our society has changed, no longer reflects the values of everyday Americans?" His comments come as anti-Trump fervor has swept the party, and Biden's allies have cast their candidate as the best bet to win the White House. But as the Democratic presidential primary winds down, the race has tightened, and Biden has faced attacks from both his left and right. Biden's plea to voters on the far left of his party to come to his side was a recurring theme of his remarks. "
