you may already know we own and operate a very large clan in the Minecraft world. There are many players there and it's quite a fun experience for all of us. Last night we had a terrible server disaster that completely devastated our entire world. It was at once a loss of real friendships, group efforts and community-based memories. Yet, for a certain reason, we made it up in a day. What are the causes and possibilities of such a disaster? Are there any ideas or plans to prevent such a disaster? Let's talk about it now! Isles of Yore is a player-driven survival game that places you at the centre of a prehistoric world where you play the role of an animal that has survived through the ages to live and hunt on an island that is populated with many of the same animals as the island where you grew up. Feeling confident going into the world, you may well think that you are the only animal on the island... but you may be surprised to learn that somewhere out there, another animal is also alive. Whilst you may have a keen eye for natural history, this other animal may have a very different set of interests and ambitions, which may or may not be the same as yours. Rather than being a knockabout clickfest, the game puts you at the centre of an exploration adventure set in an open world of procedural content. The island itself is procedurally generated, offering a number of ways for you to explore and survive. The island is marked out by a series of obstacles that form the basis of how you interact with the world - from rivers to cliffs and even basalt lava fields. These challenges will dictate your level of success and offer a unique adventure that will change with each play through. The core of the game is a niche survival genre that simulates the way prehistoric animals are expected to live. Your goal is to survive and gather resources, while encountering a multitude of animals and vehicles to interact with. After a few days you may find that you have been put in a situation where you need to hunt your food. For example, you could find yourself a predator but be hunted by a pack of herbivores. This will require you to hunt efficiently or risk starvation. You are also asked to consider your purpose in this new landscape - where do you want to go? How do you want to spend your days in this world? How do you want to interact with the other animals in the world? Gathering resources is just one aspect to the game - you will also have to hunt, look for shelter, cook your food, and so on. Creating a fully rounded, living world means that you will have to carefully consider all aspects of your survival. Explore and survive in a dynamic, ever changing world. Changelog: v2.5.2 Player Stats: • Added stats tracking Resources: • Increased amount of resources • Water level now shows at start of game Maps: • Added 5 maps (v0.1.2)
