Numen - The Land of Heroes will let you experience the rich Greek mythology and take part in epic battles with other heroes. The Gods decided to test the hero, who is best fitted for their task. The game will challenge your mind and will require multiple acts of calculations, insight and decisive actions. The universe of the game comprises of thousands of unique objects, wonderful landscapes, with which you will interact with on your way. On your way you will meet many friendly people, who will help you on your journey. Use your skills and abilities to win the game and you will be able to visit the Underworld once you have succeeded in slaying the gods' champions. You could be anyone... Perhaps you are a shape-shifting shape-shifting god or a goddess of the night. Or a hero who is on a quest for vengeance or just your soul... The only thing is that to find your way in this world you need to travel through the Underworld. You have to pass through the infernal halls, delirious deserts, the endless mysterious forests. In addition, you will have to defeat several of the gods' champions. Procedural generation Have you been too satisfied with your power for too long, because there is no longer anything left to discover in your world? We have a solution for you - an ability to generate unlimited maps, custom-made for you. 20170828 To celebrate the release of Fantastic Four, the IDS is offering special supporter packs featuring the Iron Man variant, as seen at the right. This model also features printscapes inspired by Marvel's heroes. A tribute to Iron Man. You get 3 printscapes in the Iron Man supporter pack, with 1 each of "Bad Future Tony," "Contestant Legion," and "Mockingbirds." In case you are wondering, contestant is a variant of conoperator, and mockingbird is a variant of groundcrusher. Here's a photo of the Iron Man variant model, for reference. The Iron Man supporter pack costs $50.00 and comes in a traditional IDS collector case. Shipping is charged at $10.00 for the USA, or $18.50 for anywhere else in the world. Note that international shipping can be as slow as an oink oink. Iron Man Variant Supporter Pack The Iron Man supporter pack features three exclusive 1/6 scale colosseum-grade figures, one of each of the three Iron Man variants: one with a black-feathered helmet, one with a white-feathered helmet, and one with a gray-feathered helmet. Each figure comes in a collector case and is packaged attractively enough so that they look like they've flown all the way to you from the factory in China. Each figuhe comes from a different print shop and has distinct pictorial characteristics, due to the variety of the printshop's processes used. There is also one exclusive finished joint figure included with this pack. This is the finished joint in the middle of this image of Marvel's titans:Five Ways to Combat Alzheimer's Related Links By Dr. Christine Huff Two years ago, my father-in-law attended one of the most magical courses I've ever attended. Sadly, he did not find out until too late that he had Alzheimer's Disease. After he realized the seriousness of the disease, he became determined to make sure that the people who were left behind would not experience the same heartache that he did. He used his background in technology, his skills as a gifted student, and his wealth of knowledge on how to care for a person with Alzheimer's disease to benefit a nation founded on individualism, innovation, and independence. One of his initial ideas was to use the monitoring capabilities of

Particulate is a physics sandbox. It simulates millions of particles, each represented as a visual point, using the power of modern graphics cards. The result is realistic scenes where entire physical systems (like clouds and waves) are animated and interact in real time. Particulate shows you all of this happen. You can use your finger and thumb to place objects into virtual scenes. These objects interact with all of the physical forces in the world - gravity, collisions, friction, repulsion, and more - resulting in interesting, emergent behavior. You can also create and save physical scenes, where everything can be interacted with and modified. If you like physics, you'll be blown away by the simulations that you can create. Use your imagination to create your own scenes, or customize pre-existing ones and share them with others. And although PARTICULATE is a physics sandbox, it's a full-fledged creative tool as well. Using the ten built-in tool types, you can easily create and save completely custom models. Using the Emitter and Attractor/Repeller tools, you can create dynamic models that can be saved and loaded into scenes later. Audio Reactivity Particulate plays your own music (using any music app) on top of the simulation. Or, if you don't have a favorite music app you want to use, use the built in "Low-Rez Music" to enable dynamic scene-based music. In both cases, as you move or interact with a virtual object, the music (and other sounds) react to what's happening. Note that music is not part of the actual simulation. It's an abstraction - a new dimension that's being added to the simulation. It's not meant to play any physics, it's meant to add in a sense of rhythm to your scene. Both of these features can be enabled/disabled by holding down "L" in the main menu. Download: The app is split into three parts: The "Particulate" scene part is the desktop application: you create and save scenes using the Particulate app, then open them in the Particulate Simulator using the Particulate Simulator app. The "Particulate Simulator" part is the VR application: you run the "Particulate Simulator" app, and interact with scenes using a VR headset (like Oculus Rift). The "Particulate App" is the 3D scene-based UI that you see on both the
