(Photo: Fox News) Fox News host Megyn Kelly was rushed to the hospital on Tuesday after suffering from flu-like symptoms. Kelly was in the green room at Fox News Channel's New York studios as she and her producers put together the 3 p.m. ET hour of "America's Newsroom" when she told producers that she was feeling feverish and was going to take herself to the hospital. "I just told you a moment ago I'm not doing the show," Kelly said, according to a source who spoke with the network. "I'm going to the hospital." Kelly, 46, said she was very nauseous and in a lot of pain but wouldn't say more because her producers had to leave the room. "In the interest of my health, I can't do a show today," she told Fox News. A source close to Kelly said the host did not go to a doctor's office first and instead went straight to a hospital. She made the trip from her studio to the e79caf774b

This is particularly true for the human intelligence quotient or I.Q.[Application of liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry in the determination of mutagenicity of mycotoxins]. A liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry (LC-MS/MS) method was developed for determination of mutagenicity of mycotoxins. The mutagenicity of 50 mycotoxins, including mycotoxins of high incidence, was measured by using the Ames Salmonella test system. Reverse-phase chromatography was employed to extract mycotoxins from sample solution. The mutagenicity of the mycotoxins extracted was assessed by GC-MS method. The identification and confirmation of the mutagenicity of the mycotoxins were achieved by LC-MS/MS method. The study also included detailed determination of the mutagenicity of some mycotoxins which showed different mutagenicity levels, on the basis of the correlation between the level of mutagenicity determined by GC-MS method and that by LC-
