The Grey Scout Game product line includes 8 new Scout units, founded on the most common abilities in the Warhammer 40k universe. Seven of these units (Arcanophage, Battleboss, Fast Scout, Guardian Drone, Heretic, Marksman, Summoner, Velocity Transmitter) come in a version with three upgrades or ranks that improve models, making these worth considering for two factions; the third model is a human unit. These Scout units are small models (one or two blocks high, varying from one to four blocks in width) that can be used simultaneously by two players. When a Scout unit is defeated, it returns to headquarters, ready to be moved to another player's battle line.

Among the Scouts' buildings, the rest of four are unique to the line, including the 12mph transport, which can carry up to four models each; the mountain fort, which can stop any enemy penetration with its walls; the mobile heavy support, which can deliver upgrades and heavy weapons to any models that can see it; the shackle gun, which transforms all Scouts around it into minions, making them unable to avoid damage.

These 10 units, plus the common ones, represent all the gameplay moments, from the first movement to the deployment (or elimination) of a unit. The game starts with the player picking the headquarters, then the units. The attacking player builds the most variants and deployments

2008-12-16 20:45:408/10 stars based on 166 reviews Ambre (Black Soap) is a 2007 film directed by Khamid Muradov, written by Khamid Muradov and Bashar Akhmedov, and starring Rasim Abdulataev, Yevgeni Grishin, Aleksandr Pereverzev, Nikolai Kornukhoja, Nadira Satayeva. Upon the invitation of a local shopkeeper (Aleksandr Pereverzev), a young soap maker Shamsi (Rasim Abdulatayev) is sent on his first important mission: to set out and purchase soap, also known as "ambre" in Ambre. He will go to Akbulat, a remote village where skin diseases are common and regarded as an illness. Shamsi is determined to learn the secrets of soap, and will return home with dirty hands and smelly feet, as he is emotionally attached to this part of his mission. Even before he has reached Akbulat, Shamsi encounters disaster and is forced to seek help. He meets a kindly, unshaven, and very intelligent old man (Yevgeni Grishin) named Atassul (pronounced: "atass''-ul") who takes him under his wing and they become lifelong friends. Grishin gives advice on how to deal with the villagers and send word back to Shamsi's mother. An old woman with a mysterious past and a beautiful young girl (Nadira Satayeva) are also introduced and will be a source of concern for Shamsi, as his relationship with them could become problematic. The film is loosely inspired by the history of Anatolia and the Sanjak of Amasya (Central Anatolia), where Iranian Jews, Greeks and Turks lived for centuries. In the 18th century, in the same geographic location, a young Jewish skin-diseases specialist, Tovia Mir-Tal, made their first trips to decrease infection from illnesses. Another historic figure named Ak Ildico of Amasya is also mentioned in the film, as well as the neighboring city of Sarakhs (known as Saraxis or Sari Kisa in Central Anatolia). Even some of the fantasy scenes in Ambre are adapted from the region. This film features several scenes that are, in fact, the Wild West. In them, Shamsi is often chased by other
