Help/FAQ: Attached Files The Catholic Student Union has filed an official complaint against the University of Notre Dame with the Office for Civil Rights. The complaint states that the university has violated Title IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1972 and that “NDCSU stands by that assessment and remains steadfast in its commitment to ensure that all of our students are respected and have access to a quality education free from discrimination on the basis of sex, race, color, national origin, ethnicity, disability, or any other factor that is prohibited by law.” The student union has also requested that the university provide “an accurate accounting of the funds paid out” in settlements for sexual assaults committed by members of the football team from 1993 to 2012. In addition to these demands, the student union is seeking a court order barring the university from any future federal financial aid for the members of the football team who have been found guilty of sexual assault, in addition to any other remedy the OCR could order. The union also questions whether there are enough faculty members at Notre Dame to support the many sexual assault cases at the university. This is the second time in recent months that the Notre Dame student body has gotten involved in a controversial issue surrounding the Catholic university. The university decided last November to drop its ban on contraceptives for students, which they had in place for the last few years. However, a group of students recently protested the recent decision and suspended classes at several universities. Just last month, the University of Notre Dame released a list of 41 men accused of sexual misconduct. The incidents, which date back to the 1950’s and 1960’s, came to light as part of a report by The New York Times. The investigation was requested by the University of Notre Dame, and it was released by the school on its website earlier this month. The names of several individuals were redacted. Twenty-one of the accused have claimed that they are innocent. Several of the offenders have also been prohibited from being on campus in recent months. Some of the men, however, are still allowed to participate in school activities. Despite the troubling allegations, only one of the men was actually expelled
