Resume components offered by the employer should be highlighted in the resume. Letters of recommendation are written to your instructors, employers, or others who know you well. The letters must be typed and may not include resumes. If you need a resume statement, you should create a single-page resume. All letters of recommendation are required to be mailed, faxed, or e-mailed to campus employment offices. If you need to provide a letter of recommendation to another institution, contact that institution's office of career services or a career counselor. (References can be attached to resumes. References should generally be provided through the employment office.) Do not include an "official letter to inquire" on a resume. References should give comments about your work and communicate any contact information they can provide about your references. If you ask for letters of recommendation, you may take them with you, but they need to be prepared in advance. To request a resume statement, follow the instructions below. To apply, visit each graduate school's Web site. You may also print a general application form and send it to the appropriate graduate school. If you want to apply at another institution, you will need to contact the appropriate agency for that school. For more information about how to apply, check the school's Web site or call them. If you have a question about a graduate program, ask the program's admissions, career services, or financial aid office. The Graduate Record Examination is required to be taken prior to the application deadline. (G. U. T.) You may also take the Graduate Management Admission Test. The Graduate Record Examination is administered by the Graduate Management Admission Council (GMAC). The Graduate Management Admission Test is administered by the Graduate Management Admission Council (GMAC). Edwin Chan The Graduate Record Exam is
