-9754--9--00--58--45- The separation of the children under ten years of age and the adults is usually quite congenial for both children and adult, but sometimes the younger children are disobedient and are not kept in their seats by the adults. The trouble then is usually caused by a quarrel. This is usually started by the youngest children of the family, and it is well worth the parents' while to keep the attention of the younger children directed towards the older ones, and between them and their mother. [Sidenote: The Property Question.] Unless the school authorities insist on a strict equality as to the place, and the kind, of property which each pupil is allowed to have with him, there is no doubt that there will be a great deal of strife and envy in the school. Everyone will want to have favourite pens, pencils, books and other school things. With school prizes there will be much jealousy. The girls will all wish to have pretty hand-made, unibrow pencil cases and the boys will insist on getting the best-made metal pen-holders, and the headmaster will need a stick as hard as steel to keep the boys in their places. [Sidenote: Suitable Dressing.] When the children return to school the next day they should usually present a very smart appearance. A neat appearance is necessary in the case of the boys, because they usually have their jackets worn over their collars, their neckties conspicuous, their shoes on, and their hats in their hands; whereas the girls should have their hats and jackets in their hands, their neckties drawn well up in the front, their trousers of the same length all round, and their shoes and stockings on. [Sidenote: The Right Shoes.] The feet should be properly protected, and it would be well to wear gaiters or leggings outside the shoes in cold weather. It would probably be well to give a light pair of spring shoes to the youngest children, for they will be able to use them properly in the long winter evenings and they will grow into long, hard slippers. [Sidenote: The Unkindness of In-door Boarding.] There is always some difficulty about getting the right kind

Theoretical analysis of the dependence of the proton range in water and in human tissue on the assumed volume and density of the tissue. The aim of the present work is to investigate the dependence of the proton range in human tissue on the assumptions regarding its volume and density, as well as the influence of the Bragg-peak shape. The investigation is performed in the framework of a two-slab tissue model and the numerical simulations are based on the Monte Carlo method. The results demonstrate that, in the case of tissue, the effect of tissue density on the proton range is much smaller than the effect of the assumed volume and Bragg-peak shape. In the case of water this is not so, although the simulations are performed with a finite size of the proton beam, in the experiments only the volume of the water was measured. Consequently, even a small error regarding its density can lead to substantial error in the predicted proton range.OUR PRODUCTS On this page you will find all of the available products we make as our services and facilities do not afford us the budget to print everything ourselves. This entire website was designed with these services in mind as we can only make a limited number of "wholesale" items. The idea is that you can find out what we have and what it can do for you, then we can work out the parts or products you will require and we can make them to your spec. Racers and Tradespeople are a varied bunch. The common factor is they all want the best, preferably for the best price. So we have produced two special lines of products to fit all but the most specific of construction companies.
