The game's name comes from the real-life events when two young lovers decide to seal their love for eternity by holding a duel. The film tells about a young countess whose happiness is suddenly put in question. At the centre of her world is an exotic knight who fights for the love of his life. What may happen when the evil spirit of the deceased count, a treacherous witch, seeks revenge? The game is a 2D animated epic with a full soundtrack, built from a combination of hand-painted frames and a vast range of animations. ### What's new:

= function(i) { var confIndex = i; $('.gStatic').removeClass('active');
$('.gStatic[data-gconfIndex="" + confIndex + "']").addClass('active'); }
Somehow, when I change the value of confIndex to "1" it incorrectly adds the active class to element #1. For the first two tags this work as expected, but for the third one (tag 3) it adds the class to element #2.
Any ideas on why? A: This should be how you do it (adjusting the id of your logo tag): $('.logo').on('click', function(){ var confIndex = $(this).data('gconfIndex'); $('.gStatic').removeClass('active');
$('.gStatic[data-gconfIndex="" + confIndex + "']").addClass('active'); });

Chris Plummer Chris Plummer (born 27 June 1985) is a Scottish footballer, who most recently played for Ness Brewery. Career Plummer was player-manager of Highland Football League club Brora Rangers. He took over the Brora first team after the departure of Gerry Malloy after the club were relegated from the Highland Football League in 2005. He guided Brora to a 3rd place finish at the first time of asking in the 2005 Highland Challenge Cup. After a 3 match stint with Stranraer, Plummer signed with Livingston in February 2007, on a short-term deal, as the R's survived in the Scottish First Division with a 2-1 comeback win over Edinburgh City. Following the club's promotion back to
