"In this game I decided to make it more of a challenge. To add more choices and to add more choices. To challenge players a little. To make the difficulty harder. To challenge the player to learn. In this game the difficulty is user configurable through the difficulty selection screen. The game is developed from my childhood. The name comes from the love for 16-bit era games. The dark shadows. The blooming colors. The interaction between characters. You are the protagonist of an adventure set in ancient dynol. Once a time, far in the past, a magical land was born called Proteon. It all started there, with the kingdoms and the rich and the poor." External links Category:2006 video games Category:Japan-exclusive video games Category:PlayStation Portable games

Operation Desolate Void was a naval campaign in the Pacific against Japanese forces in the Solomon Islands. It formed part of a series of attempts on the part of Allied forces following the Coral Sea campaign of May 1942 in which Papua New Guinea was invaded and the main Japanese naval base at Rabaul in New Britain was encircled and isolated for the remainder of the Pacific war. The first Battle of Empress Augusta Bay occurred between Allied forces and the remnants of the Japanese East Indies Fleet on 31 May. An Allied force consisting of American and Australian troops, fought off a Japanese attempt to reinforce the small Japanese foothold in that region at the Second Battle of Santa Cruz on 8 June. The Second Battle of Port Henderson on 7–8 June, quickly concluded in Allied favour. Finally, the main attack in Operation Imphal, began on 8 June 1942 and was a success. Following the loss of a small contingent of the United States Marine Corps on their way to Guadalcanal from Australia, on the night of 7–8 June, a decision was made to shift the entire operation to Guadalcanal in order to split the forces, and captured the isolated position at Shortland Island. Therefore, Operation Desolate Void was renamed Operation Watchtower, and the advance along the Guadalcanal coast began on 9 June. Operations leading to the plan Guadalcanal and the Solomon Islands Campaign In mid-May, the Japanese intended to move troops and supplies to the island in order to support their previously established outposts as well as advance their controlled positions in the Solomons with a large formation of warships. The campaign was one part of General Douglas MacArthur's broad strategy which would lead ultimately to Japan's decisive defeat. The efforts of Japanese forces in this campaign would prove to be decisive in the Battle of the Coral Sea which had occurred on the 18th of May. The Japanese losses in this battle were just a handful of warships while substantial damage was done to the United States Navy's fleet in the Coral Sea. By the time the Japanese planned to attack and take control of Guadalcanal, they had lost more than half the resources they had initially planned for the campaign. On the morning of 23 May, American forces near Port Moresby, New Guinea had launched an offensive against

Japanese positions along the southwest coast of New Britain. As a result, the Australian troops that were stationed on Guadalcanal had a Japanese base less than 200 miles away along the coast of the island,
