Adobe Flash Photoshop isn't the only Adobe program that can manipulate digital images. Adobe has also put together software tools designed specifically to display and manipulate moving images such as Flash and Flash Pro. Adobe offers a number of Flash tools on the web. You can find all sorts of Flash tutorials for learning how to use these tools, and you can purchase books and online tutorials from Adobe's online books store. ## Photoshop Standard Color Controls When you open your first Adobe Photoshop file, you're presented with a window that looks something like Figure 2-1, which shows you the basic image editing controls you have access to after you open an image. FIGURE 2-1: See the basic editing controls of Photoshop (on the left) and how they relate to the toolbar on the right. Photoshop has many different controls for editing and manipulating images, but four controls — the Color, Filter, Layer, and History (or History Panel) — are among the most important and used. ## The Color Control As mentioned earlier in this chapter, color is represented by a color ramp, in which, for example, the lightest value is represented by pure white, and the darkest value is represented by pure black (see Figure 2-2). Although you can use other color selections, such as using light gray, for when you want to subtly adjust the color of an image, Adobe's default color selection (slightly light gray) is a good starting point for most images. FIGURE 2-2: This color ramp shows the default color settings for a file. To set the color options for the image, open the Control Panel and click the Color Settings option, as shown in Figure 2-3. The Color Settings dialog box opens. FIGURE 2-3: Click the Color Settings icon (on the right) to access the Color Settings dialog box. You can choose the color scheme for your image from four tabs: Black & White, Grayscale, Gradient, and Gradient Add. You can also choose the color of text and any selection you make. (I discuss

Experts' meetings in clinical oncology. Several meetings dedicated to clinical research in oncology have been organised over the years. Some of these meetings have been specifically dedicated to young investigators, i.e. the now-named Fellowship Study Group. The aim of these meetings has been to encourage young oncologists and residents from the various medical specialities to get involved in clinical research. These meetings have been arranged by two scientific societies, namely the French Society of Oncology (SFION), French Association of Clinical Oncologists (AFCO) and French Association of Hematology and Oncology (AFHO) in cooperation with the French Society of Medical Oncology (SFMO). These meetings also include presentations made by medical oncologists, surgeons, radiotherapists, biologists, and nurses.

An aviator from the 69th Fighter Squadron, based at Scott Air Force Base, Ill., shows a view of the air base on Thursday, June 21, 2013. The Air Force is using the base to deploy supplies to U.S. forces at war after a bombing raid in Afghanistan. This is an archived article and the information in the article may be outdated. KABUL, Afghanistan — The U.S. military launched airstrikes into Afghanistan late Thursday in response to an attack on two Kabul compounds that killed at least 88 people, including 22 children. The U.S. Embassy in Afghanistan called it a “cowardly attack” that targeted at least 30 separate compounds where Afghan and American citizens lived. The U.S. military said in a statement late Thursday that two F-15E fighter jets dropped two laser-guided bombs in the raid but that it was unable to confirm that they hit the target. There were no reports of civilian casualties as of Thursday night. The U.S. military said it was working with the Afghan government and other U.S. partners to establish a no-fly zone over the city. The airstrikes were carried out by the 69th Fighter Squadron, based at Scott Air Force Base, Ill., in response to an attack on the compounds. In a statement late Thursday, Afghan President Ashraf Ghani’s office said the “cowardly” attack was “part of a campaign of terror launched against the innocent Afghan people to provoke insecurity and instability in our country”
