Twenty-four locally adapted sweet potato accessions from Central America and the Caribbean were evaluated for their reaction to high-temperature stress (45 degrees C for 1 hr). It was found that eight accessions are resistant while others are highly susceptible when compared to the control (grown at 24 degrees C). The resistance was estimated using three different criteria:

survival of the first leaf, and of the total root system. Seedlings belonging to the highly susceptible group died before the first leaf emerged. The resistant ones had several leaves emerging and developed vigorously after the heat stress. About 50% of the accessions used in the study showed 2-3 leaf emergence in the field. In the greenhouse, about 80% of the seedlings showed a 2-3 leaf emergence. The remaining 20% of the accessions showed no leaf emergence. In the field, seedlings of the hottolerant and -resistant accessions showed root growth at higher rates than those from hot-susceptible accessions. The hot-resistant accession BAT 88 is being used for the improvement of local varieties. Pregame Preview: Celtics vs. Wizards The Celtics weren't able to grab a win at the Washington Wizards on Sunday, and are set to do battle again tonight as they face the Wizards at TD Garden on Monday night. What to Watch For A C's comeback in Washington The Boston Celtics are 10-3 in the month of February and sit in third place in the Eastern Conference, trailing only the Cleveland Cavaliers and Miami Heat. It's clear that in these playoffstarved times the players on the floor are starting to take notice that these are real games, the stakes are higher. Trading punches Jared Sullinger and Kris Humphries were busy in the paint, landing 38 and 34 rebounds respectively, but these numbers are at least in part due to the Wizards' lack of offensive production. Against the Celtics, John Wall and Bradley Beal had combined for 3-of-22 shooting (13.6%). Meanwhile, during this week of two-back-to-backs, the Celtics have also been outscored by 18 points in their last two games, falling to Miami on
