Cilostazol is a phosphodiesterase-3 inhibitor and an antiplatelet drug used in the treatment of intermittent claudication. In dogs, it was reported that cilostazol metabolism was mediated by cytochrome P450 (CYP) 3A. The objectives of this study were to establish the pharmacokinetic (PK) profiles of cilostazol and its major metabolite (M2) after single and multiple oral administrations of cilostazol (1mg/kg) to dogs and to investigate the CYP3A-mediated metabolism. The oral PK profiles of cilostazol and M2 were determined in blood and urine samples from six male dogs given oral cilostazol (1mg/kg) once or three times a day for up to 8 days. Cilostazol and M2 concentrations were quantified using HPLC coupled with MS. After a single dose of cilostazol, cilostazol showed rapid absorption and elimination; however, M2 showed slow absorption and elimination. The maximum concentrations and areas under the plasma concentration-time curves (AUC) of cilostazol in the steady state were approximately twofold lower than those after a single dose. The terminal half-life of cilostazol was relatively long (2.1-2.6 h) and cilostazol and M2 were eliminated completely from the body within 24 h after the last dose. Following multiple dosing, the maximum concentration and AUC of cilostazol were similar or lower than those after single dose administration. The CYP3A activity from the last dose was decreased by approximately 20% when compared to the CYP3A activity from the first dose. Therefore, cilostazol is a poor CYP3A substrate in dogs. Our results indicated that cilostazol and its major metabolite were well absorbed and eliminated in dogs and the metabolic characteristics of cilostazol were not affected by multiple dosing, which is in accordance with human data.Q:
