In particular, it is today important for modern computer systems to support a variety of operating systems (OSs) such as Windows® operating systems, Linux® operating systems and Unix® systems. Conventionally, system level software has been written in C programming language. This type of software may be slow and inefficient for many systems. In an attempt to exploit the computing power of modern computers, object-oriented programming languages have been developed. Such languages may be platform-neutral which means that software written in an object-oriented language is platform-independent which means that the software may be programmed on any number of different computers, each with a different computer

As you can see we are going to need a DBI, DBIx::Class, and DBIx::DotSays as well as a database file to store all that data. You should be familiar with the command line on this system already, so you know how to create directories, create files, and use text editors to write and edit your Perl scripts. Remember that the methods of the DBIx::Class module are case-sensitive. When using the DBIx::Class class methods, pay close attention to the capitalization of the letters you use. Create a File Creator File I like to make the file a YAML document: Create a File Creator Class Now, we need a factory class that will create our file. In fact, all file creation must be done using a factory. We will also use the Factory Method pattern. Create the File Creator Class Now that we have the YAML generator, how does it get the information to create the file? We can put the file creation into a method, and then just call that method whenever we need to create a file. Create a File Creator Method We can create the file either by instantiating the FileCreator, or we can use the method. I prefer to not instantiate the FileCreator because it makes it hard for me to see where the file was actually created. Create the File Creator Methods Now that we have the file creation method in place, we can give it the information it needs to create the file. Create the File Creator Methods Now that we have the file creation method in place, we can give it the information it needs to create the file. Create the File Creator Methods Create the File Creator Instances Now that we have a file creator class, and we have created the file creating methods for it, we can tell the FileCreator class to instantiate the FileCreator we just created. Create the File Creator Instances Create the File Creator with the Factory Method Pattern The output from this script should look familiar. Create the File Creator with the Factory Method Pattern Create the File Creator with the Instantiating Method Create the File Creator with the Instantiating Method Create the File Creator with the Instantiated Method Create the File Creator with the Instantiated Method Create the File Creator with the 6d1f23a050
