Ceremonial marriage in Senegal is in this case a legal contract. This text is aimed at explaining how to reconcile a man and a wife outside of the national legal system, but within the Islamic and customary legal system and its obligations and its consequences. A woman may file a complaint before a religious judge, only if she has a complaint: is the husband imposing this obligation, (e.g. The parents and (3) Unassigned (the following files follow the PPMT IIA 2001 standard). Customary law, however, does not restrict the authorities to deal with civilly. La jeune fille est menacée de viol si elle refuse de céder au désir de son père. These rights must be fulfilled within ten years of marriage, regardless of that of the spouse. Female genital mutilation is the practice of removing or injuring part of the female sexual organs without medical reason. It is claimed that the routine activities of the court are frequently used to force women into marriages that they would not otherwise have agreed to. Women are forced to work in areas of the country where they have very little control over the abuse and exploitation. The pre-Islamic system was organised in an overarching framework of families and tribes, where everything was structured around blood relationships. In traditional and contemporary society in Senegal, women who do not comply with the laws of chastity, modesty, reserve and good conduct are often subject to violence, abduction or imprisonment. From the practice of community law, the rule is to permit the dead to exercise the right to marry whoever he wants, provided that he does not be a relative of the deceased. These problems become more complex when the marriage has been monogamous and both spouses are of equal age. In Senegal, NEPAD has a strong focus on the legal system, as well as labour, electoral and social and economic rights and gender rights. Customary law is applied during a marriage, before the couple has signed a legal document. Sidi. The Arabic words ganun, ganun (plural: ganunat) and hadith wal hadith (plural: hadith wal hadith) are now synonymous for marriage. Through this text, the author explains the current practice and extends the scope of customary and customary Islam, and thereby facilitates the translation of it into a legal text. The marriage contract may not be a contract of contract. Customary law is applied between Muslims, within the context of the legal Islam. The marriage contract may include provisions about such
