Tours. In the Short Interest Rate Cost Of Lending Index, revealed that the cost of accessing funds for small businesses fell to the lowest level ever recorded, despite the continuing trend towards new riskier lending products. The index, which tracks the cost of short-term loans for small businesses, decreased to 2.98 percent in the fourth quarter of 2011, from 3.22 percent during the previous quarter and the lowest level since the index began in 2009. That fall was largely due to the decline in the cost of longer-term small business loans, which fell to their lowest point since late 2007, along with a rise in the cost of loans for larger businesses. The composite Small Business Operations Cost Index remained at 23.45 percent for the fourth quarter of 2011, the same as in the third quarter. This is the lowest level since the index began in 2009, and is one-sixth of what it was in the fourth quarter of 2004. From all quarters. However, the number of loans available for small businesses has actually decreased in the last year, which was a contributing factor to the smaller decline in costs. As rates on longer-term loans have fallen, banks have been able to offer fewer loans to small businesses as well as compete for the limited loans they do offer. Costs of borrowing for small businesses have dropped for the six quarters that this index covers. The index measures loans for small businesses for the following types of loans: Small Business Loans: Includes loans for business start-ups, early-stage growth, expansion, growth, expansion or refinancing. Small Business Loans for Growth: Includes loans for intermediate growth, expanded operations, growth. Small Business Loans for Expansion: Includes loans for growth and expansion. For all other types of loans, the cost of borrowing falls to the closest available index level. The cost of loans for larger businesses rose less than for small businesses, although the cost of intermediate-size loans for large businesses doubled since the second quarter of 2009. Composite: Rates for the SBA loan product have risen for all loans since 2005, with the rate for the best loan program rising from an average of 9.41 percent to 14.41 percent, and the rate for other loans from a low of 9.02 percent in the first quarter of 2008 to a high of 11.83 percent in the third quarter of 2011. The short-term loan interest rate fall largely was due to the decline in the cost of loans for small businesses, which fell to their lowest point since late 2007. The cost of intermediate
