Tecplot 360 License CrackMetro Detroit real estate's hottest markets: Metro Detroit's hottest markets Metro Detroit is a hot place for real estate right now, and here are our picks for the markets with the most activity. Detroit News Real Estate Writer Daren Blomquist breaks down some of the hottest real estate markets for home owners and sellers. Since 2012, the U.S. Census has started including a question on every American's phone about whether their household moved in the previous year. The number of people answering yes has risen dramatically in the last five years, a trend that is likely the result of millennial buyers looking for suburban opportunities in the face of gentrification and higher home prices, according to a report by the National Association of Realtors. Metro Detroit is a hot place for real estate right now, and here are our picks for the markets with the most activity. Detroit — With a population of more than 685,000 — that's more than twice as many people as Flint, the next most populous city in Michigan — Metro Detroit's growth has a boom-and-bust feel in some areas, but real estate markets around the city center are fairly stable right now, experts say. That's driven, in large part, by the homes in the southern part of the city that flood lower-end neighborhoods in the outlying, wealthier areas, said Gerald Waidmann, president and CEO of Waidmann Realtors. "You've got a sort of old underclass that is driven to it by the real-estate offers that they find because a lot of their income's going to be tied up in that housing. They're not getting it back in terms of wealth or anything, but they can buy a house," he said. A house with $60,000 in a lower-income neighborhood c6a93da74d
