when you defeat the boss of the farm, you will get a message from the harvest goddess. she will tell you that you will be reborn as a child with new skills. when you become a child, you will be able to make some purchases. if you want a new skill or item, you need to give the harvest goddess a cheque for that amount. every time you win a battle or defeat an enemy, a new skill will be unlocked. if you spend money on a skill that you do not have, you will not be able to use it. you can also pay for an item to be added to your inventory. items are gained through a combination of spending and getting. if you are bored, you can also do something called a "rescue" and that will give you money and a new item. (rescues may be found in the town or at a dig site. rescue items are always worth more than normal items.) harvest moon: boy and girl is a classic series which i used to play a lot back in the day. it is one of the series games i have been avoiding getting to play again for a long time. my first entry into the series was back in the "old days" of the first game in the series, where you could still speak to characters and marry them. (that is one of my favorite parts of the series.) it was also the first game where i really enjoyed being able to trade items with other players. i have always enjoyed having a "farmhouse full of stuff" and then giving it away to someone else. and so the idea of being able to trade things without having to go to the market to do it was very enjoyable for me. harvest moon: boy and girl had that system in place in the very first game in the series. i wish i had more time to play it. although this game has a much better and bigger world for you to explore, it also means you have a much larger number of people to compete with for the things you want to sell in the marketplace. that means you have to be much more careful about what you want to trade or sell to get the best price. but it is still a good game and i encourage you to play it. you can't mess up the romance by being awkward at a first meeting!
