Sign up here »» Mattheus Balmeer has published data on rogue antivirus products. He says to AV-Test that the sample is possibly a fake. If an AV-Test user can access the page, they can see the sample and the data Mattheus provides. This is a problem, as antivirus software provides such important information as for free. It shows that rogue antivirus software is a problem in their applications. Hopefully he'll provide a real sample next time. We're working on a solution and have an update for that very soon. @AlexcoAshton Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have any further questions. Moderator: Thanks very much for the feedback. This is not a problem. The main problem is that AV-Test can not verify that the sample is fake. But even if they verified that it is a fake, this isn't very important for a company like us. We are not going to publish a list of fake samples. We only provide the list of the most popular fake samples for our users' benefit. We didn't say it is fake. And if someone from AV-Test say so, he should provide the real sample. If he don't, then he'll just provide the fake samples. If he did it even more, but here in this thread he didn't. He should be right for doing that. Because as we see he does it (pointing at the below, and the following sample), so other AV-Test users will also do it. It is a normal procedure. But AV-Test is not right, because it doesn't say that the sample is fake, and after all we are just providing our users with the most popular fake samples. I'll only remind you that you need to provide the real samples too, if you tell him that the sample is fake. Secondly, and this is the most important point. AV-Test is one of the best AV test sites. So if he or her doesn't have or doesn't want to provide the real samples, we as a company can't make it work. It's hard for us to keep working with AV-Test, and it's hard for us to provide our users with the most popular fake samples.
