Sebastian Bleisch was released on parole on July 10, 2000. After Bleisch's film Kontrollverlust was screened on German television in 2001, he revealed that he had in fact made pornography from the ages of 12 to 18 and that he had sold about 10,000 of his films. The fact that the subject of his films had been a taboo made his move an extremely unusual one, especially as he had made just as many films where children of the same sex had kissed in each other's presence, including in his last film. Bleisch's subsequent films helped to illuminate the dark side of the German youth culture and have often been banned. Bleisch's second book, Johannes, was published in November of the same year, and is directed towards the younger generation of German teenagers. Bleisch met the teenage actor Johannes Heilmann in 2002, and they spent several evenings together, after which Bleisch rekindled his film career. After several years of absence, he shot another movie in 2003, which failed to be released because of legal troubles. Sebastian Bleisch's final film, Original was released in December of 2005. In it, the German director looks at the roots of paedophilia, which he traces back to the power of father figures. Bleisch's father was a stern disciplinarian and the director was taught by his father to be obedient and respectful at all times. His father died when Bleisch was 13 years old, and afterward Bleisch worked out a division of labour with the children at home to satisfy his father. In the 1980s, he began to secretly film the children at home and in public, his first attempt involving Familiar was aimed at his best friend. Before he had a chance to release the film, however, he was arrested and charged with child pornography offences. He spent a year in police custody, during which time he lost the use of his hands due to a traumatic injury. The film was initially banned, but it was allowed to be shown in Germany as long as there were no nude scenes. In 2006, Bleisch re-released Familiar in Germany in a cut version which contained less material. The film won the award for best feature film at the 2006 Cherbourg Film Festival. 5ec8ef588b
