TURBULATION Description:
Turbulation is a software and system for the generation of musical audio spectrum spectrograms, developed at the Applied and Computational Mathematics Group of the U. of Málaga (Spain). The output of the program is a chart where the analyzed audio spectrum is represented by colored lines. The most used representation is the so-called multi-scale spectrogram, which shows the complete audio spectrum in a frequency domain, with different color scales for each different scale of frequency or time.

Another representation called time-frequency spectrogram is obtained if the audio spectrum is transformed into the time domain. Both of these representations have been used in the creation of the corresponding spectrograms with good results. The software has been designed for the automatic detection of the main instruments of an orchestra or band and their evolution over time, what makes it perfect for analyzing, for example, the evolution of the timbre of an instrument or a particular band.
