Since the arrival of a feature-rich, fast and fluent database based image management system like Lightroom, you'll probably also look for a companion tool that can help you search for images. For those who are using Lightroom to manage their images, both a new "Find in Library" feature and several important performance enhancements mean you'll get better search results and will find more of the images you need to work on. A new RAW search feature can also help you get to great photography faster and a few new templates are included for faster catalog creation and access. For when downloads aren't necessary, Send to Web is now built-in to Lightroom and a new Undo Export option lets you avoid any potential worries about accidentally abandoning your edits. Both new and existing workflows, like tapping into third-party services like Dropbox, Google Drive or SkyDrive, are also improved. As shown in the comparison above, because of the intuitive interface and new faster performance the RAW import and export method is the fastest compared to previous versions. Therefore, I will say that if you shoot RAW only, you will like Lightroom 5.

A big improvement compared to previous versions is that the RAW import process happens in a much more intelligent way: it doesn't suddenly jump to size editing or layer editing, it is waiting until it is finished. The whole process is much faster and smoother than previous versions.

The fourth last important improvement is the Smart Previews that I already mentioned. But the addition of the keywords is also important. After importing and following the Quick Edit stage, items I want for a quick edit are available in the context menu.

Although Photoshop is primarily a raster-based image editing program, you can also use it to create line art using the Pen tool. The Pen tool can be used with any layer, but when it's used with a layer that already contains a photo (like a photo layer), the Pen tool works like the Brush tool — or any other eraser tool — and erases any areas inside the layer that are covered by the photo.
