It's been a few weeks since I started on this project, in which I used the original lineup for Wolfenstein 3D for a total overhaul of all assets, original and redesigned. The first things you'll notice when entering one of the levels is a fully new level design. This was the first step, and making the level design new helps to shift the gameplay from aimless carnage to something more interesting. The second step was making all of the level assets look more like their actual selves; from the original springing motion for the enemies, to the familiar glowing outlines of the doomsday device I'm using. The enemies themselves have been greatly improved, especially in the number of projectiles they fire, and the jumping and dodging mechanics used to traverse the level. As I continue with this project, I'll be posting more of what I've been up to to stay up to date. In the mean time I've included a link to my Github account, where you can see the most recent changes. Be sure to Like my Facebook Page to keep up with what I'm working on, and check out my Twitter @chac0phox1 to stay in the loop.Q: Auto populate text box I am very new to javascript, so I do not quite understand it. I have an auto-populating text box in HTML, and I have a "change" function for the box which is working. Is there any way to do the same thing for an integer in the box, so that if, let's say, the value in the box is 3, it would automatically be 5? Here is the JS: function change(){ var x = document
