Ask HN: Closing my blog, change of attitude - moinath Dear friends, I'm closing down my personal blog (- still writing) in a couple of months because I can't find the time and motivation to continue it. I started blogging for personal reasons but since last year I've been working as the principal developer of an open source software called Grummit. Grummit is a lightweight-Java web framework for *nix and it's completely open source (MIT licence). This is the first software that I've developed and I'm very proud of it. I received positive feedbacks on some related conferences but it's been hard to keep the project alive. Maybe you want to use it or know something about Grummit, feel free to drop a mail to me. My address is in my profile. I'm considering to bring some of my personal concepts and discussion points to some other forums. ===== rewordad If it's hard for you to keep the project alive, why don't you create a foundation to keep it alive? Your blog post seems to be a good read to me. What is your take on it? ----- larrydag Why is it hard to keep the project alive? ----- moinath thanks everybody for the answers. Well, just telling you what's the project and why it's difficult to keep it alive doesn't give you much idea about my project. I'm a bit baffled about the negative feedbacks. It's a bit frustrating (believe me I'm not trying to put you down, I've
