A team of Stanford scientists led by Caroline Chen traveled to Wuhan and met with hospital workers and residents to ask simple questions about their symptoms. The team sent the information to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) who then created a questionnaire to be answered by people who are exposed to COVID-19. After the tests, half of the people who went to a hospital after being exposed to the virus had no symptoms. 40% did not have any symptoms when asked about their health by a researcher at Stanford. Scientists hope this will be the first step to reducing the number of people who are infected. There are currently more than 140,000 diagnosed cases of coronavirus in the US and more than 3,000 deaths. This new study is being conducted in the US. The Stanford team says they want to replicate the study in other countries.
